THE ART (AND SCIENCE) OF DEMYSTIFICATION: Helping Children Understand Their Unique Learning Profile

Marty Foley, M.Ed. and Joanne Roark, M.A.

Marty Foley is a reading specialist with long experience in the field of education and learning disabilities, who has served as educational director and teacher at a private school for children with learning problems. Joanne Roark has a background in education and learning disabilities and has spent many years teaching children in typical and special education settings.

This workshop will focus on the demystification process, a guided discussion that helps students understand their strengths and needs and the strategies they need to use to be successful. It was developed by Mel Levine, M.D., founding director of All Kinds of Minds, an institute dedicated to translating research on learning into programs and services for students. The presenters have both acted as facilitators for professional workshops and will guide participants through the purposes and processes of demystification. Its sophisticated analysis of learning profiles and exposition of a structured method for adult/student communication will make this program valuable to psychologists who work with students in schools as well as to educators.

The goals of this workshop are to:

- (a) Demonstrate the purpose, benefits and steps in the demystification process;
- (b) Illustrate techniques used to develop a structured, effective method of positive communication with students about their learning profiles;
- (c) Provide opportunity for participants to plan a sample session directed to helping students know themselves.
