Healthy attachments are the foundation of the work we do and the lives we live. This workshop will provide creative play-based interventions to strengthen relationships, build resilience and foster trust. Play is essential to healthy social and emotional development. Children speak the language of play and laughter is the best medicine. The hands-on activities are attachment focused through play therapy modalities called Theraplay and Parent-child relationship play therapy. These activities are appropriate for all ages.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES:

Upon completion of this training, participants will be able to:

- discover how play can build meaningful exchanges and build resilience
- gain insight about yourself through safe, playful interventions
- demonstrate how to communicate with children, teens, adults and groups
- describe tools to help clients develop healthy attachments through safe effective outlets
